Resolution 1856
MONUC – Key Achievements and Challenges

Since November 1999 MONUC has helped to bring peace to most of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC).

• Overseeing implementation of the Lusaka agreement (1999)
• Monitoring ceasefires between foreign and Congolese forces
• Brokering local truces
• Disarming and repatriating thousands of foreign armed combatants
• Creating a conducive environment for the Sun City national dialogue
• Assisting the transition to democratic rule
• Facilitating the first democratic elections in 40 years (2006)
• Helping the Government dismantle remaining armed groups in the Kivus and Ituri
• Supporting regional reconciliation

MONUC has seen the people of Congo (DRC) through ceasefires, the transition to national elections and planning for local elections in 2010. With continued armed conflict in the Kivus, the Mission has entered a peace enforcement phase of operations to help the Government:

• dismantle the FDLR – the last significant rebel challenge to its authority
• protect vulnerable communities from rebel violence
• establish state authority and the rule of law.

MONUC remains in Congo because the legacies of a war that claimed some 4 million lives (1998-2003) persist:

• The illegal exploitation of natural resources continue to fuel internal conflict
• Ethnic differences and land disputes are unresolved
• The elected Government has limited impact outside Kinshasa
• Governance capacity is weak
• Effective institutions to deliver services and the rule of law are absent
• Human rights are abused with impunity
• Corruption is endemic
• Heavily armed rebels continue to challenge state authority in the east
• Integration of former rebels into the FARDC is incomplete
• Root and branch reform of the security services is essential for establishing and maintaining State Authority in all parts of the country.
Protection of Civilians

Years of war, plunder and failure of the state, have caused the displacement and death of millions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Although peace has been established in most of the country and the people have voted in the first democratic election in 40 years, the eastern region remains fragile. Many communities are besieged by violent armed groups opposed to State authority and the rule of law. The Kinshasa-based Government is seriously challenged by its responsibility to protect its citizens in areas far from the Capital.

MONUC is assisting the Government to build responsible security forces that are able to assume the protection of its people and property, its borders and the natural resources within them while also undertaking direct action to protect people even in very remote communities.

One of a kind

MONUC is a case study for peacekeeping to the extent that it is engaged in civilian protection while supporting military operations by the nation's armed force (FARDC). It does not have the operational capacity to position troops in every locality, given DRC's size, poor infrastructure and security challenges, but it has developed new modes of intervention to meet the broad protection challenges prescribed in its mandate.

MONUC has prepared joint civilian and military contingency plans to facilitate access to humanitarian assistance and to anticipate and respond to protection risks. It has also pressed the FARDC to integrate civilian protection into the planning and conduct of military operations.

Huge challenges remain especially in dealing with displacement, reprisals against civilian populations and sexual and gender based violence.

IDPs in the Kivus

According to UN OCHA, more than 800,000 persons have been displaced in North and South Kivu Provinces as result of military operations against the FDLR since January 2009. There are an estimated 400,000 new IDPs in North Kivu, bringing the total in the province to 1.06 million. In South Kivu there are at least 450,000 new IDPs for a total of 536,888. However, more than 300,000 IDPs have returned home in North Kivu and UNHCR has recently closed the Kibati IDP camp, which at one point housed 65,000 people living in perilous conditions.

FDLR reprisals

Since the start of “Kimia II” in North Kivu, FDLR rebel forces have increased their attacks on civilians for allegedly collaborating with the FARDC. Rapes, arbitrary killings, vandalism, mass lootings, abductions and prohibitions on the free movement of populations have been their main weapons to spread terror amongst villagers.

FARDC misbehavior

The FARDC hierarchy has declared a “zero tolerance” policy towards abuses, including sexual violence, committed by its soldiers. These declarations are an indication of progress against indiscipline and impunity; however civilians in many locations still consider the FARDC a greater threat than the FDLR.
Children with armed forces

Children are not safe on any side of the conflict. Between January and 30 July 2009, 1,853 children were released from armed forces or groups and handed over to reintegration programs. But many children remain with rebel forces and within the ranks of the national army (FARDC) and MONUC’s Child Protection Section have been following up with the FARDC chain of command to release them. Advocacy has led to some releases but there are FARDC units that continue to hide and refuse to release children. MONUC continues to work for their freedom and return to civilian life. A substantial increase in sexual violence against children has also been reported in areas where recently-integrated FARDC troops are deployed as well as in FDLR controlled areas.

Rising ethnic tensions

Patterns of abuse by the newly-integrated FARDC have been reported and denounced by local communities and leaders in Walikale and Lubero Territories. MONUC has documented similar instances, against the backdrop of xenophobic speeches and the constitution of local defense groups. This has raised alarm at the potential consequences of a rapid and politically motivated movement of displaced populations, in particular, Congolese refugees from Rwanda.

Humanitarian access

In North Kivu, humanitarian access is limited to the main road axes around Goma; restricted in Masisi and Rutshuru Territories; and difficult in South Lubero, Pinga area and the Walikale Territory, for logistical and security reasons. In South Kivu, according to OCHA, 10 of the 15 road axes are inaccessible to humanitarians.

Protection against the LRA

After the launch of the joint UPDF-FARDC offensive against the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA) in December 2008, security in Province Orientale deteriorated significantly. Between December 2007 and July 2009, the LRA killed 1,233 civilians and abducted 645 children and 980 adults. Humanitarian access remains difficult due to the prevailing insecurity and the absence of roads. An estimated 45 per cent of IDPs in the Province are without any assistance. MONUC is progressively deploying troops in Haut and Bas Uele (Dungu, Faradje and Dingila) to increase humanitarian access, protect vulnerable populations in remote areas and facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance.

MONUC Responses

Coordination between humanitarian organisations and MONUC’s civilian and military components has led to “joint protection” and “joint planning”, and recent deployments of Joint Protection Teams (JPT) to the most vulnerable areas. This has resulted in better capacity to anticipate population movements and concentrations, and to prioritize axes for humanitarian delivery and the protection of civilians.

Joint Protection Teams (JPTs)

JPTs, comprising experts from Civil Affairs, Political Affairs, Human Rights and Child Protection, were first deployed in February 2009 and coordinated by the MONUC Civil Affairs Section (CAS). They have helped improve community relations, information flows and early warning capacity on the ground, by bringing the civilian and military components together in operational environments. A Rapid Response and Early Warning Cell feeds information about operation Kimia II, to MONUC Senior Managers, improving mission capacity to respond as situations change in the field.
Some 200,000 cases of rape have been recorded in the Democratic Republic of Congo since the Great Lakes conflict began in 1996. This number greatly understates the scale of abuses and their physical, emotional and economic consequences, given fear and other disincentives for women and girls to report the crime.

Rape is widespread among militia groups and government security forces and is increasingly evident among Congolese male civilians, especially in post conflict provinces. Although there are indicative data based on reported incidents, precise data on the scope and magnitude of sexual violence in DRC is unavailable due to limited access to many areas; the stigma that victims seek to avoid by not reporting attacks; and the lack of clinics or other services that might record medical treatment for sexual violence in remote areas.

Deep roots

Sexual violence in DRC has many root causes and contributing factors linked mainly to the:

- deeply eroded status of women in areas of conflict;
- weak state authority and the legal system, and;
- breakdown of community protection mechanisms.

Impunity

The principal challenge however is an ingrained culture of impunity in DRC. Perpetrators at all social and economic levels are seldom brought to book. There is a lack of political will to prosecute high-ranking officials, especially in the military. Police and judicial bodies are weak and there is limited access to justice for those courageous enough to seek it.

Armed groups

The escalation of rape and other sexual violence in the eastern region today is attributed mostly to armed groups and the national army (FARDC) that has recently integrated thousands of CNDP and other militia. Among those now integrated in the FARDC are commanders who face charges before Congolese military courts and the International Criminal Court (ICC).

Unreported and unpunished

Among the main reasons why victims or witnesses of sexual violence do not report cases is a lack of confidence that justice will be served. The justice system:

- has no provision for victim or witness protection;
- lacks independence and impartiality;
- provisionally releases alleged perpetrators;
- usually delivers minimum sentences or releases perpetrators;
- reparations for victims are not executed.
The guilty frequently escape from prison, before or after judgement. Since January 2008, 1,519 prisoners, including inmates responsible for violent sexual crimes, escaped Congolese prisons.

Preventive action

MONUC and UN agencies, with the support of UN Action against Sexual Violence in Conflict, have developed a Comprehensive Strategy to combat sexual violence in the DRC that coordinates the work of key UN agencies, international and local NGOs and other civil society groups at provincial, national and international levels. The strategy includes the following components:

- protection and prevention
- reform of the national security sector
- assistance for victims of sexual violence
- ending impunity for perpetrators.

UN agencies have taken the lead in coordinating and implementing each strategic component. MONUC is establishing a Sexual and Gender-Based Violence Unit to ensure sustained advocacy with Congolese authorities and to support implementation of the Comprehensive Strategy.

MONUC is helping national authorities to create specialized sexual violence units for the police; strengthen judicial expertise in the area of sexual violence; and provide legal support for victims. Peacekeepers are also supporting community-based prevention with military patrols in areas where women and girls are at high risk. This includes market places and routes to and from their work in the fields. Temporary military operating bases provide foot patrols at night and distribute mobile phones so that villages can raise the alarm when rapid interventions are needed.

The Human Rights Office provides legal support to survivors of sexual violence, deploys mobile legal teams, and gives material support to tribunals and detention centers. It also provides sensitization on sexual violence for communities and their leaders, and advocacy for government, military and civilian justice.

Since 2008, the Human Rights Office has followed up on 1,221 rape cases and brought them before courts in North and South Kivu. So far, 374 perpetrators have been convicted. MONUC also provides training for judges, lawyers, police, military prosecutors and medical personnel.

MONUC is vigorously pressing the Government and its security forces to improve discipline, prosecute offenders and remove commanders whose troops systematically commit SGBV offences.
MONUC Action to Prevent and Sanction Sexual Exploitation and Abuse

In response to allegations that MONUC personnel had committed serious acts of sexual exploitation and abuse (SEA) the Secretary-General declared a “zero tolerance” policy towards abusive or exploitative behaviour.

As a result, a Conduct and Discipline Unit (CDU) under the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General (SRSG) was established.

The Unit oversees training for all military and civilian peacekeepers, provides policy guidance to the SRSG and monitors activities to promote high standards of personal conduct throughout the mission. CDU also makes preliminary assessments of allegations brought against civilian and military personnel. It maintains offices at MONUC HQ in Kinshasa and Field Offices (FCDO) in Goma, Bukavu and Bunia in eastern Congo where most of MONUC’s military personnel are based.

SEA Awareness Training

All peacekeeping personnel attend SEA training on arrival in the mission area. They are made aware of areas that are "out-of-bounds" and behaviour that is unacceptable. Off-limit areas include places associated with prostitution, drug sales, the presence of minors and security risks. Additional preventive measures include curfew hours, prohibitions on travel by non-UN personnel in UN vehicles, and the promotion of positive welfare activities. To ensure compliance with the standards of conduct expected of MONUC personnel, UN Military Police are deployed throughout the mission and conduct routine patrols to monitor UN personnel and the use of UN vehicles.

SEA Focal Point Network

Twenty two civilian, 45 military and 28 police, serve as focal points in a network, assisting CDU and senior managers and military commanders in the field to monitor behaviour and instill discipline when necessary. All SEA focal points conduct briefings, distribute information materials, support welfare activities and receive complaints of misconduct.
Field Assessment Visits

CDU staff conduct regular field visits to assess discipline and advise senior managers and commanders. They meet with MONUC personnel, as well as staff from UN agencies and international and national NGOs. Meetings highlight the standards of conduct expected of UN personnel, procedures for reporting breaches of conduct, and disciplinary consequences.

Monitoring

The Special Representative established a Conduct and Discipline Advisory Committee (CDAC) in 2008 comprising senior managers to reinforce standards and the commitment to compliance with the zero tolerance policy. The Committee meets regularly under the chairmanship of the SRSG to monitor mission-wide compliance with conduct and discipline policies and to recommend preventive and remedial action if needed.

Reporting and Investigating SEA

Under UN staff rules and directives, all personnel have a duty to report allegations of misconduct that they are aware of, or suspect. Non-UN personnel are also encouraged to bring legitimate complaints against UN personnel to the CDU.

Following receipt of an allegation of serious misconduct such as SEA, fact-finding inquiries may be conducted and the CDU compiles all available information. All serious allegations are referred to the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) for investigation. OIOS operates outside the MONUC chain of command.

Special fact finding teams have been sent to the Kivus after MONUC received information of possible new cases of SEA involving military personnel.

Results

- The rate of Category 1 (most serious) allegations fell in 2008. A total of 56 Category 1 allegations were received of which 38 related to allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse (SEA). In 2007 as a whole, there were 66 Category 1 allegations.
- 3,620 peacekeepers were directly trained by the CDU in 2008. Through coordinated initiatives with its mission partners, a total of 31,097 peacekeepers received the required CDU briefing on SEA. This figure includes 27,477 military trained by 497 trainers who attended CDU train-the-trainer sessions.
- During 2008, seven members of military and police components were repatriated on disciplinary grounds, mainly following allegations of SEA.
- Six international staff members who committed serious criminal acts, such as bribery, corruption, conspiracy, extortion and unlawful receipt of gratuities, were dismissed.

Problem areas

The in-country investigatory capacities of the OIOS have to be strengthened so that investigations can be carried out promptly. The reporting from troop contributing countries on measures taken against offenders has also to be improved and made more transparent.
Most of the Democratic Republic of the Congo is at peace. Three provinces – North Kivu, South Kivu and Orientale - contain foreign armed groups, principally the FDLR and the LRA. If these remaining groups are dismantled and stability returns to the eastern region, the government could turn its attention to the normal tasks undertaken in a functioning State: the security of its borders and natural resources; the protection of its citizens; equal access to justice and the rule of law; and access to social services.

A Congolese state that could achieve this, would also bring enormous benefits to the surrounding region.

What does “Stabilization” mean?
- Security: when armed groups are dismantled and police take over public order from the army
- Political: when spoilers can no longer prevent dialogue to resolve differences
- State Authority: when the government runs the country – not armed groups
- Return and Reintegration: when refugees and displaced people can return home

What are MONUC and the UN agencies doing to bring this about?
- Re-opening six key roads in three provinces and ensuring that they can be maintained
- Training 780 national police for these “axes” and 800 border police to police the frontiers
- Rebuilding the territorial administrators’ offices, local courts and prisons, and equipping them
- Finding work or resettlement packages for fighters who are demobilized
- With UNICEF, UNHCR, WFP, FAO, IOM and UNDP; creating conditions in which people can return home and restart economic activity.

What is the Government doing to stabilize the DRC?
- The government has prepared its own Stabilisation and Reconstruction Plan – STAREC
- This plan extends the stabilization concept to 26 war-affected territories of the Eastern DRC
- It also adds education and health services to the mix of stabilization programmes
- The government is now discussing with donors how this can be funded
- The donors are discussing together how best any funding can be managed and disbursed
What does all this cost?
- The original, smaller UN plan was funded to $136 million, with indications of more to come
- STAREC is estimated to cost $1.2 bn.

Who will do the work?
MONUC and the UN agencies will support the Government and its provincial administration. NGOs and the private sector will also play a part.

What has been achieved to date?
- Strengthening of the army. Support is being provided for FARDC operations against FDLR
- Disbanding, integrating or demobilizing combatants. More than 15,000 combatants were integrated into the army and more than 2,000 others demobilized in the last six months.
- 600 kms of road are being rehabilitated in 6 priority areas, providing more than 3,000 jobs for local people, including ex-combatants.
- 300 territorial police have been deployed. This is reducing insecurity.
- Promoting the return and reintegration of IDPs and refugees. Recovery programmes have been started for the benefit of more than 200,000 people in 80 settlements
- A USAID-funded community programme is now underway, focusing on job creation and rehabilitation of basic infrastructure at 45 different locations
Q: What is MONUC doing to implement its protection mandate?

A: MONUC forces deploy and patrol in places where communities are most vulnerable and they protect humanitarian supply lines and camps for 1.8 million internally displaced persons (IDPS) in eastern Congo. But the eastern Congo is a big place – roughly three times the size of France and MONUC forces cannot be everywhere all of the time. The Kivus alone are the size of California (with practically no roads) with a population of more than 10 million; MONUC has about 10,000 blue helmets for the whole area.

This is why MONUC is fielding joint protection teams (JPTs) to work with communities in the highest-risk areas of the Kivus and the Haut and Bas Uele districts (where the LRA is present) to enable military commanders to direct their forces to prevent violence - not just react to it. These teams are working with local administrations, traditional chiefs, FARDC, community groups and NGO’s to promote reconciliation and to resolve grievances that can lead to violence. They have improved the Mission's local contextual knowledge as well as communication between local populations and peacekeepers, and in this way MONUC has been able to mitigate some of the humanitarian consequences of rebel attacks and the military operations to shut down the FDLR and LRA.

MONUC also provides direct protection for civilians in remote and vulnerable places through a network of mobile bases that can be redeployed to areas of high or emerging risk at relatively short notice. It consults with UN agencies and NGOs to assist the integration of their humanitarian and protection priorities with its military planning. MONUC also protects the humanitarian delivery system – its airfields and supply warehouses – and provides humanitarian convoy protection where needed.

But MONUC cannot replace the Congolese national army and the Government’s responsibility to protect its people, its borders and the natural wealth within them. These are sovereign responsibilities. This is why MONUC and other partners such as the United States are working to help the Government improve the performance and conduct of the security forces so that they can meet these responsibilities.

Q: Does the Mission have the resources it needs to do the job?

A: No peacekeeping mission is ever likely to have everything it needs. But by using its resources in a smart way, by working flexibly and by deploying assets strategically, MONUC is making the most of its existing assets.

What we need most urgently are the reinforcements and additional technical capacities approved last year by the Security Council. The additional troops are on their way but we still do not have the helicopters and the information gathering capabilities that we requested.

Q: The violence inflicted on civilians by the FDLR and the LRA has been awful and it has been increasing despite the presence of MONUC. Why?

A: It has increased in some areas and it has been reduced in others. Reduced threat levels have enabled many IDPs to return to their communities. The international media attention given to violence in eastern Congo is a good thing. The needs of the Congolese are enormous and attention to those needs will hopefully generate greater international support.

However, the east has been wracked by violence for more than 15 years. By some estimates, 5 million or more people have died as a consequence. Earlier in the decade, the number of IDP’s in the eastern DRC reached a high of 3.4 million people. As of June (2009) there were an estimated 1.8 million and most are living with host families in the Kivus and Orientale province. They remain a major concern, which MONUC, the UN agencies and NGOs are addressing. MONUC provides military protection, and logistical support to enable humanitarian operators to increase access and deliver humanitarian assistance to vulnerable and war-affected populations, and will continue to do so.

Q: What explains the violence today? Are people better off because of operations like Kimia and Rudia?

A: Rebels in both groups are under pressure and unfortunately civilians are paying a price, as they always do when these groups descend upon local communities. UN/OCHA estimates that 40 percent of new displacements in eastern Congo are due to ongoing military operations against the FDLR, the LRA and other armed groups.

Some studies, including those conducted regularly by the International Rescue Committee, have cited conflict as the direct or indirect cause of the death of 3.5 to 7.8 million people in the DRC since 1998 from treatable conditions including malaria, diarrhea, and malnutrition. MONUC is not seeing suffering on anything like that scale today.

Nothing justifies human suffering but the number of armed groups has diminished dramatically. Earlier in the decade about two dozen armed groups engaged in violent conflict in various parts of the Congo, a conflict which was intensified by the presence of several foreign armies. The foreign armies have left and most of the Congolese armed groups have been dismantled. With the integration of the CNDP forces into the national army earlier this year, the principal remaining sources of ongoing conflict in Eastern DRC today are the FDLR and the LRA. Most of Congo is at peace but the presence of these foreign armed groups and some residual national militias has prevented the full re-establishment of state authority and economic development and they are a constant threat to regional stability.

Despite the undoubted humanitarian impact, the successful conclusion of Kimia and Rudia will essentially bring to an end a cycle of war and devastation that began 15 years ago.

Q: Reprisals against civilians seem to be more numerous since operation Kimia began earlier this year.

A: The FDLR forces are responsible for most of the violence against civilians in the east. They are indulging in practices that have been their signature for more than a decade. They are led by people who had a role in the Rwandan genocide of 1994. These leaders don't have a peaceful prospect. They survive on the backs of defenseless citizens and rob Congo of its resources. The violence will not stop until their forces are dismantled. There could be a different future for many who serve with the FDLR however: many of the FDLR rank and file had no involvement in the Rwandan genocide. MONUC is trying to separate them from their leaders with peaceful incentives to disarm and repatriate. More than 1,200 combatants have done so together with about 10,000 family members since January.

Q: Wouldn't the east be less violent if the government and MONUC negotiated with the rebels?

A: The Security Council considers the FDLR as an outlaw group and the primary cause of conflict in the region. The FDLR has no political legitimacy and among its leaders are extremists who bear responsibility for the 1994 Rwandan genocide. The Security Council does not recognize the FDLR as a legitimate negotiating partner. Council members consider the disarmament and repatriation of the FDLR as critical and MONUC is mandated by resolution 1856 (2008) to do this in coordination with the FARDC. But although armed pressure is a necessity, peaceful and protected repatriation remains an option for the FDLR; the UNHCR has the authority to monitor their well being on return to Rwanda. For those who may have a genuine Congolese affiliation, they can disarm and relocate within the country.

Q: How can expatriate FDLR leaders be brought to account?

A: It is important that the countries in which FDLR leaders are based take measures to end their support for the atrocities the FDLR is inflicting on the civilian population in Congo (DRC). They can do this, if there is political will. These people are operating in full view in North America, in Europe and elsewhere. UN mandated sanctions should be applied against those individuals who have been listed by the Security Council.

Q: Where does MONUC’s responsibility to protect end?

A: Lasting security in Congo lies in the reform and strengthening of the national security services. MONUC is working to accomplish this but this will not be achieved overnight; it will require sustained and well coordinated support from the international community. There must also be a constant effort by the Congolese army and police to improve discipline, punish offenders. This must be accompanied by a systematic effort to improve conditions of service with barracks and the regular payment of salaries.

Q: Why do some civilians fear FARDC units as much as the FDLR?

A: Discipline and control of the FARDC (which now includes thousands of recently-integrated former Congolese militia members) is a problem. Many of the newly integrated troops and Commanders involved in operations are ex-CNDP and Mayi-Mayi militiamen who have an equally bad track record of atrocities in the Kivu Provinces.

The protection of civilians is first and foremost a Government responsibility and the Congolese Government and military command have committed themselves to enforcing discipline, addressing impunity and improving command, control and support to its troops.

General Etumba, the DRC Chief of Defense Staff, is currently in Eastern DRC to enforce a policy of zero-tolerance in the FARDC, as proclaimed by President Kabila. He is fully aware that uncontrolled elements of the FARDC have preyed on civilians and his aim is to ensure his commanders take responsibility to stop this.

Q: What is MONUC doing to improve FARDC behaviour?

A: MONUC is providing logistical support for a total of 22,000 FARDC troops in the Kivus and Orientale province. This support is aimed at improving discipline and morale within the FARDC.

The Mission has set up a Rapid Response Emergency Working Cell (RREWC) to monitor the performance and conduct of those FARDC units that are supported by MONUC and it will withdraw its support to operations where FARDC units show a blatant disregard for international humanitarian law.

MONUC provides information on FARDC units and commanders responsible for violence against civilians—and particularly sexual violence—so that perpetrators can be brought to justice and offending officers removed from command. The government has acted on some of the information provided, to remove offenders.

Q: What is MONUC doing to bring those senior FARDC officers wanted for human rights violations to justice?

A: MONUC continues to follow-up with DRC authorities to ensure that appropriate judicial action is taken in connection with the five senior FARDC officers accused of having committed serious human rights violations.

We have been informed that as of 4 August, two of the five FARDC officers were in detention in Kinshasa, and three others had been placed under the control of judicial authorities.
Q: There was an allegation reported in The New York Times of 5 August 2009 that a 12 year old boy had been sexually abused by a peacekeeper.

A : Unfortunately, the NYT article did not mention when or where that offence was alleged to have occurred. A search of all MONUC military and civilian records showed that nothing of the nature reported in the NYT has been presented to the Mission.

Q: What is the Mission doing about allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by its own peacekeepers?

A : MONUC follows up on all allegations made against its peacekeepers and welcomes information that enables it to pursue further enquiries. Investigations are carried out by the autonomous UN Office of Internal Oversight (OIOS), which does not report to MONUC.

The MONUC Force Commander deployed a fact finding team to North Kivu in July to check on rumours of sexual exploitation and abuse. The team visited two camps for internally displaced persons in Goma and interviewed police officials and NGO leaders. There were no complaints of inappropriate behaviour by peacekeepers. A similar fact finding mission is in South Kivu this month (August).

Overall allegations against peacekeepers have decreased and not all of these allegations have been substantiated. On average more than 30,000 people serve in MONUC in the course of year and there were 38 SEA allegations made in 2008. Nevertheless the fight against SEA remains a top priority for the Mission. Even one case is one too many.

Challenges: UN Country Presence Staffing 2009

Feb 2009
Adopted by the Security Council at its 6055th meeting,
On 22 December 2008

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements of its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolution 1843 (2008) and resolution 1794 (2007) and the statements of its President dated 29 October 2008 (S/PRST/2008/40) and 21 October 2008 (S/PRST/2008/38),

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Stressing the primary responsibility of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for ensuring security in its territory and protecting its civilians with respect for the rule of law, human rights and international humanitarian law,

Condemning the Congrès national pour la Défense du peuple (CNDP) repeated offensive military actions in the past months, which have caused massive displacement of populations in North Kivu as well as cross-border movements of refugees and which have also involved the PARECO and other illegal armed groups, and condemning also the attacks by the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA) in the Orientale Province, as well as the resumption of hostilities by illegal armed groups in Ituri,

Underlining that a major obstacle to lasting peace in the Kivus is the presence and activities of illegal armed groups on Congolese territory, including the Forces Démocratiques de Libération du Rwanda (FDLR) as acknowledged by its resolution 1804 (2008), which represent one of the primary causes for the conflict in the region,

Taking note of the final declaration of the Nairobi summit organized on 7 November 2008 by President Mwai Kibaki, acting Chairman of the International Conference on the Great Lakes region, and President Jakaya Kikwete, President-in-office of the African Union, and the communiqué of the extraordinary summit of the SADC Heads of State and Government held in Sandton on 9 November 2008, welcoming the appointment of facilitators including the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes region, former Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo, and the former President of the United Republic of Tanzania, Benjamin Mkapa, inviting these facilitators to keep the Council informed of their activities, and encouraging the countries of the region to maintain this high level of commitment on the crisis in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and act to assist efforts to resolve the conflict,

Recalling the joint communiqué of the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo and the Government of the Republic of Rwanda signed in Nairobi on 9 November 2007 and the Acte d’engagement which emerged from the Conference for Peace, Security and Development in North and South Kivu, held in Goma from 6 to 23 January 2008, and reaffirming that the Goma and Nairobi processes are the appropriate framework for stabilising the situation in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Emphasizing the responsibility of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Governments of the region to prevent the use of their respective territories in support of violations of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1807 (2008) or in support of activities of armed groups present in the region in accordance with the Pact on Security, Stability and Development for the Great Lakes Region and urging them to take effective measures to prevent crossborder support to any illegal armed group in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and welcoming the progress made in high-level bilateral talks between the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda,

Recalling also the importance of urgently carrying out comprehensive and lasting security sector reform and of permanently disarming, demobilizing, resettling or repatriating, as appropriate, and reintegrating Congolese and foreign armed groups for the long-term stabilization of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the contribution made by international partners in this field,

Recognizing the link between the illegal exploitation of natural resources, the illicit trade in such resources and the proliferation and trafficking of arms as one of the major factors fuelling and exacerbating conflicts in the Great Lakes region of Africa, and in particular in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Expressing its extreme concern at the deteriorating humanitarian and human rights situation, condemning in particular the targeted attacks against the civilian population, sexual violence, recruitment of child soldiers and summary executions, and stressing the urgent need for the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in cooperation with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) and other relevant actors, to end those violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular those carried out by the militias and armed groups and by elements of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC), the Congolese National Police (PNC) and other security and intelligence services, and to bring the perpetrators, as well as the senior commanders under whom they serve, to justice, and calling on Member States to assist in this regard and to continue to provide medical, humanitarian and other assistance to victims,

Condemning the continuing illicit flow of weapons within and into the Democratic Republic of the Congo and declaring its determination to continue to monitor closely the implementation of the arms embargo and other measures set out by its resolution 1807 (2008),

Underscoring the long-term, sustainable efforts needed from the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and its international partners to consolidate democracy and promote the rule of law, good governance, recovery and development,

Expressing its full support for MONUC, condemning all attacks against United Nations peacekeepers and humanitarian personnel, regardless of their perpetrators, and emphasizing that those responsible for such attacks must be brought to justice, Recalling that the temporary increase of MONUC’s capacities authorized by its resolution 1843 (2008) aims at enabling MONUC to reorganize, and in particular reconfigure its structure and forces and optimize their deployment, allowing the constitution of a quick-reaction capability to provide greater flexibility to deploy as needed to strengthen efforts to protect civilians and provide additional security in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Recognizing that effective coordination between the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and MONUC on security matters in the areas of conflict as well as the accelerated building of credible, cohesive and disciplined Congolese armed forces is essential for the implementation of MONUC’s mandate,
Taking note of the fourth special report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, dated 21 November 2008 (S/2008/728), and of its recommendations,
